One of the country's oldest theaters was built in 1822 by builder Josef Gaube. It belonged to the most important German theatre in Bohemia before the war. German groups used to perform here until the mid-twenties and then Czech performances were performed here as well.

The theatre is nowadays opened to all amateur or professional, domestic or external companies.

The theatre belongs to the city and it is named after poet K.H. Mácha from 1945. The last major reconstruction was executed in 1991, only the enclosure walls remain and opened again on 18.12.1991.
